WHO IS "REDDY" FOSTER? Supposed to be Jim Duncan, a Washington Criminal.

It was stated in yesterday's STAR that police and jail officials here were unanimous in the opinion that the Harry Poindexter arrested and released in Cincinnati was none other than J. B. Buck alias J. B. Brown alias Bright, who is under sentence for the larceny of Mrs. Potget out of jail here was related in yesterday's fell from the young woman's lips. STAR. Several circumstances besides the dexter was about to engage in was similar to of jumping overboard she that he did at the Arlington here, his story of being respectably connected is similar and the name he took there is that of one of the persons living in the house where a fellow prisoner

The "Reddy" Foster who was mixed up in the Cincinnati scheme is thought to be "Jim" Duncan, a well-known character of this city, who has had been about here for several years, and some time since he married a Pittsburg girl a house of ill-fame, who is said now to be in Cincinnati. Last summer he was arrested here the work house, but, taking an appeal, he re-mained his time in jail. He was wanted for the larceny of overcoats, and with Jim Foster left and went to Baltimore, where Foster (who is from Pittsburg) was arrested and is now in prison in Baltimore. While in jail Duncan had a cell very near that of Buck, and they ecame somewhat intimate. It is thought that Duncan was the man who drove Buck and Sewall around the city after they had escaped from the District jail and, perhaps, assisted in getting them out of jail. It would not be surprising for him to take the family name of his former pal and prefix his own of "Reddy." Buck is wanted by the warden of the jail, from whose custody he escaped. Newman is wanted by his sureties and hose who innocently assisted in getting him out of jail, and Duncan is wanted by the de-

There was some excitement in the vicinity of Food for Reflection in the Future of These Ever-Increasing Automata. From the Kendal County (England) News.

So far as the automatic machines are yet in use among us they have done comparatively little to diminish human employment. The sweetmeats mechanically dispensed at railway stations have been probably consumed by way of extras, and not in substitution for like goods which would have been purchased at a confectioner's. The same may be said of cigarettes that the girl would die, ran to Mrs. Young's to and splashes of scent. If confectioners and tobacconists and perfumers have lost, the loss has been so widely distributed as to be inappreciable. With regard to matches the case is perhaps different. Match boys and match girls must find their revenues substantially diminished, and must anticipate that their "craft is in danger." The automatic "try-your-weight" machines have driven the old-fashioned apparatus, with boy attendants, completely out of the market, and have annihilated a small but not undeserving branch of industry. But if it be true that American extensions of the automatic principle are to be introduced into this country a much more serious inroad upon industries, both small and great, is in store for us. We are to have our penny newspapers as we now obtain our penny hewspapers and the newspaper boy our penny chocolates, and the newspaper boy razors are to become purchasable in the same way, to the probable diminution in the number of shop assistants, and even luncheons of considerable proportions and variety are to be gen-erally procurable upon the automatic method, great prejudice of waiters and bar maids.

ter for reflection in the future of these unway, it is a curious fact that more than sixty years ago the principle upon which the automatic machines are manipulated was applied to open tobacco boxes. In some parts of England these square boxes survive in many an old-fashioned inn. By dropping a half-penny into the slot the box, by means of a spring similar to To the Editor of The Evening Stars:
